PREFATORY NOTE

I. D. REDDICK

Librarian, Atlanta University

The graduate theses that are produced at a university are one fair test of the scholarship there. Directly they tell us a great deal about the quantity and quality of the students who win the advanced degrees; indirectly they tell us something of the faculty and research facilities that are provided for these students.

Accordingly, those who are interested in understanding the education that occurs at Atlanta University would want to give some attention to the number, range and merit of the written essays that it accepts in partial fulfillment of the requirements for its Master’s or professional school degrees.

There should be others whose chief interest may lie in the subject matter of these research studies.

Both types of readers may find this booklet useful.

It is essentially a listing of all theses that have been accepted by the University since the convocations of 1942. At that time or soon afterwards a compilation was published. It went back as far as 1931 when the first thesis of the newly established graduate school was approved. This present list brings the story up to and includes the summer convocation of 1947.

A few statistics may be in order, for the bare figures summarize much and suggest even more. Atlanta University in all of its history has granted about 1,085 degrees beyond the usual Bachelor of Arts and of Science. Historically, 6 honorary degrees (5 A.M.’s and 1 Litt.D.) were awarded between 1897-1928 and during the same period two students, William D. Thomas and William A. Rogers, earned “at least in part, by study under the direction of the faculty” their A.M.’s. These 8 advanced degrees appear to be about all that the University conferred prior to setting up its graduate school in 1931, though the General Catalogue of 1929 does contain a vague and somewhat confusing statement that “this record does not include those cases in which the degree of A.M. has been conferred for other reasons than those stated above.”

At any rate, we do know that since 1931 and up to and including 1947, 18 honorary and 1,064 earned degrees were awarded. Of these 1,064 students who studied for their, 795 of them submitted theses; the 369 others were either in the Library School which did not require a thesis or were working for the M.Ed which demanded a more limited paper that is called an “investigation.”

It is interesting to note the distribution of the theses by year, by department and by sex. The tables on pages 56, 57 and 58 give a resume of the main facts in this connection and the charts on pages 54 and 55 convert some of the figures into pictures.

These fluctuations help document certain shifts in teaching personnel, in the cultural and occupational interests of students, the educational policy and growth of the University, and in the ebbs and flows of war and peace, depression and prosperity.

It is also true that a large share of the theses in the humanities and social studies were on the subject of the Negro. So much so that this topic is not indexed here because it was found to be too large and too general for purposes of simple classification. It is also worth noting that Social Work and Education bulk large; and that women more than double the number of men.

What does all of this mean? Perhaps some time soon somebody will want to do a thesis on theses written at Atlanta University!

This present booklet is not that study; it is, as has been indicated, a compilation of titles and authors arranged in systematic order for ready reference. It is a labor of love at the hands of Caynelle W. Barkdale, A.B. and M.A. in Library Service.

Mrs. Barkdale has been the Reference Librarian of Atlanta University for thirteen years. As such she has at one time or another advised with almost all of those who have toiled for and finally won the highest degrees that this university now grants.

In preparing this publication Mrs. Barkdale is thankful to Miss Ella M. Gaines for her general assistance and to Mrs. Theresa P. Barnes who typed the final copy.

Though great pains have been taken to avoid errors we are hopeful that the authors whose works are cited as well as the readers of this booklet will forgive the inevitable mistakes.
